THAT "LONG LINE OF STATESMEN."

The first clause of the democratic platform adopted at Cincinnati pledges the party "anew to the constitutional doctrines and traditions of the democratic party as illustrated by the teachings of a long line of democratic statesmen," &c.

We suppose that this "long line of democratic statesmen" must extend back at least twenty years, and ventured to mention Jefferson Davis, James Buchanan, Robert Toombs and others as leading democratic statesmen of twenty years ago, and modestly inquired if the "constitutional doctrines" to which the party of 1880 is pledged, was illustrated by the teachings of these men.

Our contemporary, the Tribune, is evidently worried at such a suggestion, and hastens to say that we do not present the question fairly. It disposes of Jefferson Davis and the others mentioned as democratic leaders in 1860, by mentioning the name of Stephen A. Douglas and says he received more than twice the number of votes received by John C. Breckenridge. In the light of facts, that is a very unsatisfactory answer. Mr. Douglas received the electoral vote of only a single state, that of Missouri, together with three votes in the state of New Jersey, the remainder of the electoral votes of that state being cast for Mr. Lincoln. Mr. Breckenridge received seventy-two votes, all from states that are expected this year to give the democratic ticket eighty votes. Mr. Bell received the electoral vote of Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia, which then included West Virginia. In all of these states, Breckenridge polled a very large majority over Mr. Douglas. Add the electoral vote of these states, where Douglas' vote was comparatively small, to that above mentioned and we have one hundred and nineteen, or more than two-thirds of all the vote that can be positively claimed now for Gen. Hancock.

From this statement, it very clearly appears that Mr. Douglas was not considered as a representative democrat of that period, and it is certain that he never was afterwards, to the day of his election, regarded as a democratic leader. His popular vote was 1,373,157 to Breckenridge's 845,763, not "more than twice the number," as stated by our contemporary, but the vote cast for Douglas was largely from states now certain to vote the republican ticket, while those for Breckenridge came from states now relied upon as certain for Hancock.

But, says our neighbor, "the traditions and practices which the democratic platform speaks of, are not referable to the area of 1860, but that the traditions of popular rule and constitutional government, as expounded by Jefferson, are the traditions in question." We thank him for the information, for it is information, and will be news to ninety-nine out of every hundred of his readers. But Jefferson has been dead fifty-four years, and the platform speaks of "a long line of democratic statesmen." Certainly he does not mean to say that Jefferson, who died in 1826, was the end of that "long line."

Have there been no statesmen since, whose teachings illustrate the "constitutional doctrines" to which the party is "pledged anew" at Cincinnati? Has the democratic party produced no statesmen in the last forty-four years? If it has had no one since the days of Jefferson whose teachings illustrate the "constitutional doctrines" referred to, it certainly ought not to be entrusted with the control of the government now, even if it has borrowed a union soldier's uniform and shoulder straps for campaign use.

But if we are mistaken as to the "long line" of statesmen whose teachings illustrate the "constitutional doctrines" of democracy, we are willing to be corrected. If the "long line" has been broken for more than half a century, and the breed of statesmen has run out, it is bad for the party now. If the line has been kept up and we are mistaken, let the Tribune set us right by giving other names than those we have mentioned, and we will try to ascertain what their "teachings" have been, as an illustration of what is meant by the "constitutional doctrines" to which the party is pledged anew.

This editorial is already longer than we intended, but our neighbor beseeches us to enlighten him on the question as to whether the republican party saved the union. We think it did. We say this with all due regard to any difference of opinion that the editor of the Tribune may entertain on the subject. The democrats made the election of a republican president a pretext for destroying the union. The leading democrats in the south to-day were the generals, colonels and majors in the army that fought against the union. The leading democrats in the north are the men who discouraged enlistments in the union army, opposed every measure for raising means to support the union army, and placed every obstruction possible in the way of the union army. We do not deny that there were thousands of patriotic men in the federal army who have voted the democratic ticket, and who still vote that way, but they did not go into the union service because of the advice of democratic leaders, but in spite of their teachings. No fact in the history of our country is more thoroughly established than this.

The Tribune closes its editorial with the following statement:

"Why, Tennessee gave 30,000 soldiers to the union cause, and at least two-thirds of them were democrats to begin with, and are democrats to-day, and will vote for that good democrat, Winfield Scott Hancock, of whom, as you may have heard it intimated, we are going to make a president."

The editor certainly intended this in a Pickwickian sense. Nothing could be further from the truth. We have been associated with Tennessee union soldiers in war and in peace, and we say it now without the fear of successful contradiction, that five out of every six of them have been and are republicans, and their vote will be cast for General Garfield in that proportion, on the very lowest estimate. If the editor of the Tribune is as poorly posted on other matters as he is in reference to the politics of ex-union soldiers in East Tennessee his opinions are not very valuable. We would not have alluded to this subject at all if the Tribune had not, but if it wants to go into a discussion as to the part taken by the republican party in saving the nation we are ready at any time. We say unhesitatingly that the republican party is entitled to the credit of having saved the American union.

The Nashville American comes to us daily now, with the following in prominent type, near the top of the first column on its first page:

"The strict maintenance of public faith, state and national."—Democratic National Platform.
"The world do move." But yesterday, as it were, our esteemed and newsy contemporary was demanding, with all the emphasis of absolute authority, the resignation of D. M. Key as a United States senator from Tennessee, because that gentleman entertained views on the currency question equivalent to the above expression, culled as a choice sentiment from the democratic platform adopted at Cincinnati. We congratulate the American upon this evidence of its thorough conversion. Better late than never. But it can not now be classed in that "long line" of statesmen whose "teachings illustrate," etc.

Haunted Me.
A workman says: "Deb, poverty and suffering haunted me for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did not stop until I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have been sick a day since; and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost."—Christian Advocate.
